The other rooms, workspaces, viewing spaces are situated on the basement floor, planned in such a way as to be inundated with natural light at almost all ho To introduce such natural light, the planning included, among other elements, English yards enclosing the floor substantial staircase that also lets in natural light, as well as an angular-morphology double space connecting oor to the ground floor and making the basement an integral part of daily life.

The back courtyard, the house's main outdoor hosting area, is largely shaded by louvered steel pergolas with rotating slats. The pergola's silhouette precisely extends the contours of the constructed vessel, creating a flowing continuum between the interior and the exterior. A swimming pool is situated at the end of the courtyard, intersecting almost its entire length. Both the public space and the master unit feature direct access and a wide view of the pool.
